HOW TO BECOME A HAIRDRESSER

The part time road to becoming a fully qualified hairdresser will take 3 years, although you will be able to start earning an income from the beginning. As a learner you will come to the college one day per week plus a practical day every alternate week. The rest of the week you will be working in a salon, outside of college.

There are many advantages to the part time course. The cost of the course will be distributed over a longer period. You may work and stay in your home town and travel to Cape Town, once per week, saving on accommodation cost. You can start earning money which can contribute to your study fees. The part time course is ideal for the person who has been working in a salon and has wanted to become a qualified hairdresser. Doing the course part time has the benefit of the learner gaining a huge amount of industry experience.

1. Start as a learner by enrolling at Dermatech. (July Enrolment Available)
2. Become an apprentice at a salon and start earning a salary.
3. Qualify by taking a trade test.
4. Attend training on Mondays and include Tuesdays every second week for supervised salon days at Dermatech.

THE TRADE TEST

To qualify as a professional hairdresser, you must complete a trade test. This happens at various times during the year. It is conducted by the Services SETA at any approved trade test centres countrywide. Trade test assessors are assigned to evaluate the incumbent qualifying hairdresser who will perform various hair treatments in order to qualify.

You will need a certain number of logged hours/years of experience and training in order to be accepted to take this test.

The Dermatech Hair Design programme prepares learners for this, and provides real-life experiences on campus so that learners can be confident when that day arrives.
